STATEMENT OF PURPOSE
FOR AUSTRALIAN STUDENT VISA

I was told I couldn't do it, that girls were not supposed to aspire to be researchers. The higher level biology classes were full of dissections and anatomical descriptions, subjects that were uncomfortable topics to teach to women. I grew up in a society that still valued women as housewives, and where my passions were discouraged in order to prevent me from becoming unmarried. However, I have always felt that my passion for biological research was non-negotiable; for this reason I hope to be able to obtain a visa to study in Australia, where I can obtain a world-class education regardless of my gender or background.

This Australian student visa will allow me to attend the University of Melbourne, a renowned research institution known for its progressive education system as well as its connections to a variety of industrial and academic positions to help its students succeed. I have always been passionate about furthering cancer research, and I know that the University of Melbourne will train me in the scientific knowledge and skills that I will need to take my career to the next level. At the same time, I believe that I will thrive in an academic environment designed to expand perspectives and encouraging cultural exploration, and I look forward to the opportunity to learn about different ideas and viewpoints.

I hope to eventually become a research scientist running my own lab, an opportunity that would be extremely difficult to obtain in my home country. I believe that with my Australian education, I will be a better candidate for research jobs around the world. This educational opportunity will not only prepare me with cutting-edge knowledge and training, but will also equip me with an open mindset that can adjust to a variety of situations. It will enable me to chase dreams that are not possible back home, and allow me to pay this kindness forward by training the next generation of researchers and scientists.

You may ask yourself after receiving an assignment like this. Don't worry, since it's not as hard as I could look at a look. In case you are an inquisitive person, you have better chances of writing a fantastic essay of this type. Although they often say curiosity killed a cat, it turns out to be a valuable asset when it comes to this kind of rehearsal. To write a well observation essay, you must become the reader's companion, helping them to immerse themselves in the atmosphere that you have experienced completely. His description must come to life through the imagination of the reader, and that is one of the main points here. What is an observational rehearsal? We define first! In essence, an observation essay is a form of "direct inquiry", a writing that requires that an event, person, area, situation, concept or phenomena be meticulously observed and analyzed. In other words, observational writing tries to provide the reader with a highly detailed sensory experience that would allow them to perceive the subject as if they were seeing it. When you are making an observation, it is essential that you pay special attention to the object and take notes in doing so. For all that is right, a distinction should be made between the observations that are made only to collect raw data and those that are carried out to write an essay. In some cases, a writer of a fictional story or a news article may decide to include some brief observations in his writing as a means of adding interest to the piece or providing the necessary evidence to prove a particular point. Also, an investigatorYou can include the data collected through observations in its qualitative investigation. But the observation essay observation the assignment is different in a way that serves as a tool for evaluation. Your observation skills and your attention are evaluated based on how well the task was completed. This type of writing follows its own set of guidelines and format, which are set out below. Write an observation essay: the 7 Tips to Follow Each essay has its characteristics and writing requirements. It is impossible to write something properly without knowing its main objective and peculiarities. So what should we consider when writing an observation essay? Let's take a look at the most significant aspects you should learn first: What to write about? A theme suitable for an observational trial can vary from a child's courtyard in your local neighborhood to a bee colony enjoying the morning sun. By deciding on the subject, go for something that interests you at least and see that you have easy access (without being too involved or interfering with the subject). Why? Because only in such a case you will write an informative and grabbing essay. Besides, it might be very tedious to write about things you don't like. You don't want to waste your time like that, do you? For example, if we take a look at the example of the children's playground, there are several important things you need to know. If you go to the playground with your own son or friend's son, you'll have an impact on that environment. And the same is true of the bee colony: its mere presence can disturb the activity of the insects and therefore influence the results of their observation, making them unreliable. That takes us to the second step: to choose whether or not an external observer (spectator) or an active participant in his observation. What's your role? In most cases, the writer may find himself a spectator as the most comfortable role he must assume for the observational essay. This choice is reasonable for several reasons, but the most is that, as an observer, observer, You can actually get to concentrate on taking detailed notes at a given time, rather than remembering information later (probably would be the case if you were a participant). Although writing as a participant can take place in many situations where choice is really unavoidable. For example, if you wanted to write an observational essay about your brother's graduation or something like that, it would be very difficult not to get involved. Similarly, in some cases, even if you have the option of being just a spectator, you should also consider the possible influence you might have on the environment, event, or person being analyzed. Write down in detail. It is one of the most important steps for this particular writing (as your notes are your role for the most part). The main purpose of an observational essay is to describe an idea, event, or object as vividly as possible. You should do that because, while reading your essay, the person will be able to imagine that he or she is the observer. The exact order in which things happened is also important when observing an event. Use the singular first-person pronoun. In most trials, it is forbidden, but in the observational trial, it is often recommended to use "I." However, before starting at the writing stage, double the requirements for any specific instruction on pronouns. Using the present tense. It is best to write in the present when you describe a person, animal, or place you observe. But what if everything happened in the past? Don't worry, imagine what's happening right in front of you. By using indefinite or progressive time, it can help the reader to put himself in his shoes and experience the things he experienced. Make the most of the sensory details. When properly transmitted, each fragment of the object can add significantly to the entire That you're "pinning." You must involve all the senses: smells, sounds, sounds,colors and shapes. All those little puzzle pieces should eventually add to a large-scale, vivid picture. Using precise language. Making the reader feel that he or she is the observer is what every writer wants. In this case, a vivid description is the best option. Instead of writing that there was some noise, you should describe the sound in great detail using appropriate adjectives. For example, noise can be mute, suppressed, resonant, sonorous, etc. This way the reader will be able to see a better picture. What is the best way to start an observational trial? When it comes to structure, the observing role does not have strict rules to follow. That's another reason why some find this type easier than, say, expository writing assignments. However, you should start by introducing your subject, answering general questions about the environmental conditions of your observation (location, purpose, methods, etc.).It is clear that the beginning of the essay should capture the attention of your audience. The first sentences have to invoke interest and make the person want to go to the reading. Writing an introduction to an observational essay is a very responsible part of your task. Therefore, it would be better to read some tips that might help you get started with confidence. There are a few ways you could go about the introduction. We'll take a closer look at 5 of the most used ones: Provide a brief review of the entire essay. It will be the reader's guide showing the direction. In addition, a brief explanation of the purpose of the essay may indicate whether the reader's expectations will be justified. Open your essay with an anecdote. However, it is very risky because not all people can get it. You should also put your argument into context because it will be easier for the reader to see your point. Start with a question. But, you need to be sure that you are strongly With his theme. In addition, this strategy allows you to decide to decide To give the answer yourself or leave it open. Use a peculiar fact. If there is an interesting theory that encouraged him to drive his observation, he can use it at the beginning of his role. Since it awakens its interest, it could also work in the same way in its audience. "Click" in trials? Yes, it's not a guy, but here, it's more than a cliff than a clickbait. You probably hate when you end up an episode with something shocking and put the caption of "being continued", right? You can do something similar in the introduction section of your paper and reveal the results of the end. Finally, do not forget to include your observation test occasion declaration in the introductory section. Keep in mind that it is not your title, but the central idea of paper. In an observation essay, this key phrase could take the form of the general impression (or perception) that obtained from the entire process. Writing the body of an observation essay Your observations should be described in detail in the body's maulos. Make sure your text is coherent, linear and written in the present time. Sounds, colors, images and odors must be transmitted accurately because (as indicated before) the purpose of its task is to allow the reader to go through his own vicious experience. End an observation essay correctly in its conclusion of the observation test, you must briefly write on your observations and personal thoughts. You can explain what these observations mean for you (or it could mean for the reader) or why it is important to do that type of observations. To involve more than the reader, you can ask some questions to promote an additional discussion of the subject. In addition, based on how you start your essay, your end can change. For example, if you use the "CliffHanger", you must envelop it here, in conclusion. If you possess a question, you could want to give your own answer to of your essay. Observation test sketching limbs first, thumb. Tu be familiar with the object or experience the event you are describing in the essay at least once in your life. However, it will be more convincing if you observed something more than several times. Depending on the subject being observed, you may decide to set the information in (a) the order that occurred, (b) according to what you consider essential, or you may decide even (c) to organize it in the form of a narrative. One of the things that could significantly influence your organizational structure is the topic you've discussed and the audience you're preparing the essay for (Which structure will work best for them?). For example, you choose a theme "How sugar affects our brain." The best way to see that is to eat sugar daily or exclude it from your diet by monitoring your health and making notes about changes in your body. In the introduction, you can make a claim that sugar can create a harmful or beneficial effect on the human body. In the middle paragraphs, you can mention all your observations, such as how you know, how you feel, how your behavior changes (whether you are depressed or happy), etc. In the concluding section, you should summarize all the information, expressing your own thoughts about this experiment and explaining what value it has for others. 20 Good Observation Test Topics What should I choose to observe?
